Excerpt: . . . latter being laid in herringbone with a border of standard sized brick flanked with brick laid end to end. Each bell-trap at the intersection of the walks, instead of striking a discordant note, has been seized upon and utilized as a centre for a brick motif, which is consistently floral in design. One of the accompanying illustrations show a walk of brick, flanked by columns and roofed with vines, through which one looking down toward the lower garden obtains a vista of surpassing beauty. Interesting examples of the low garden wall are to be noted surrounding many dignified houses. Rough texture brick of varying shades of reds, browns and soft purples laid in Dutch bond with cream-gray mortar gives charming effects absolutely in keeping with the houses. The illustrations of our American gardens accompanying this article show a few of the many delightful effects...
