Excerpt: .over the way--for she went with us; the poor soul! like me, it isn't often she gets out from that brute her--- but never mind--as I said to Mrs Biggleswade, My dear, this is the Prince's pork, and they don't look like common vulgar pigs, do they? And they didn't; they looked as white as if they'd been washed with the best scented Windsor soap, and dried upon damask. My dear, whispered Mrs Biggleswade to me, and I could see something was passing in her mind-- My dear, them's the Prince's pigs! Well, I feel so affected, I could kiss 'em. Tickle. Not bad things, I daresay, to put your lips to, when roasted. Mrs Nutts. Ha! There was something in 'em. They wasn't at all common pigs, I tell you. Fed on corn, and milk,...
