The fervid questions that agitated the nation are illustrated with great force in the Fourth of July Oration, The Address at Cowpens, and other speeches contained in the volume. Governor Perry believed from his earliest manhood: The Federal Constitution, the most perfect system of civil policy that the wisdom of men can ever invent. To preserve it, he contended in the arena, in editorial chair, the hustings, and its legislative halls for over thirty years. The speech made in 1850 in the House of Representatives, on State and Federal affairs, is a masterpiece of exhaustive study and close reasoning. When in 1860 the South Carolina delegation withdrew from the National Democratic Convention, Governor Perry would not act in concert with his colleagues, but remained in the Convention in the face of the vituperations of the press and people of the State. His vindication of his course, addressed to his constituents in an open letter, is a powerful summing up of the situation. He remained in the Convention, he declared, because he believed the highest interests of the State and country imperiled by withdrawal. He had the moral courage to stem popular opinion, and boldly declared: There is much more consolation in being right than in being successful when wrong. The paper on National Restoration, written, after the refusal of the U. S. Senate in 1866, to allow him to take his seat in the Senate, is an epitome of the attitude of the...
